

SERVE, PROTECT, AND UPHOLD THE CONSTITUTION, WITH EVIDENCE

HistoricLedger overview · October 2026

HistoricLedger evaluates public claims against the evidence and documents coordinated disinformation, so the people defending our institutions can answer it with facts. This overview describes what we do, how the evidence is evaluated, and how it can support your work.

What we do

We research public figures and public claims from the record: court dockets, government filings, official journals, and reporting from established outlets. Each study puts one question to a defined set of subjects, such as every candidate in one race, and reports what the record shows for each of them.

How the evidence is evaluated

Evidence first. Every claim is tied to its sources. A finding is a headline, a plain-English account of what happened, and numbered links to the documents it rests on, so a reader can follow each one to the original.

The same screening for every subject. Each subject in a study is put through exactly the same questions. A corruption study looks at adverse legal matters, abuse of power, financial conduct, ethics violations, corrupt character, falsehoods, and scandals.

Checked against its own sources. Before release, each finding is checked against the sources it cites.

What the subject did, in the record's words. Findings report what the sources say. Commentary is kept out of them.

Free research for campaigns

Opposition and disinformation research at no cost, shaped to what your campaign needs. You choose the subjects and the question; the findings report what the sources say.

Discreet when it matters

Material can be kept private and shared only with the people you choose.
